Improving health services for young people living with HIV

Thank you for picking up this leaflet. We want to share with you some of the things you can do to help young people living with HIV feel more comfortable and supported in health services.

Living with HIV presents young people with many challenges and we have lots of questions about our future. You are the adults in our lives who can make a big difference in how we cope and how we stay happy, healthy and safe.

We know that there are lots of guidelines, manuals and standards, such as those from the World Health Organization (WHO)¹, that you are expected to use to make your services more youth-friendly.

One document that we think is also very important when working with young people living with HIV is the Positive Health Dignity and Prevention Framework.² This was developed by people living with HIV and encourages everyone to share responsibility for preventing HIV. It is about more than just our physical, mental and sexual health. It focuses on the rights, dignity and complete wellbeing of people living with HIV and the importance of meaningfully involving people living with HIV; hearing our voices and recognising our needs and desires.

We made this leaflet in consultation with young people from Zimbabwe, Tanzania, Mozambique and Swaziland – who are all part of the READY+ project and members of the Global Network of Young People Living with HIV (Y+) – so you can hear directly from young people about what really matters.

At the end of the leaflet there is a Charter. We hope you will feel proud to use this in your clinics and offices to show people that you support young people living with HIV to be positive about their futures, live healthy lives and be treated with dignity and respect.

1. WHO (2015) Global standards for quality health-care services for adolescents: A guide to implement a standards-driven approach to improve the quality of health-care services for adolescents.
2. GNP+ (2011) Positive Health, Dignity and Prevention: A Policy Framework.

There is also a scorecard for young people in your services to let you know how you are doing and for you to measure your progress.

Please share this with your colleagues and friends so that more young people living with HIV can have the best possible support.

We know that you can make a huge difference to the experience of young people accessing services. We are relying on you to help us stay happy, healthy and safe.

We hope you find this leaflet useful. If you do, tell others about it!
